A new cordless device, specifically designed to inject hyaluronic acid into delicate areas, has received an award at the 2ND Anti-aging Medicine European Congress (AMEC) in Paris.

The Teosyal Pen, from Juvaplus, won the '2nd Anti-aging & Beauty Trophy' at the AMEC for Best Aesthetic Device. Juvaplus have now collaborated with Teoxane Laboratories to market the product worldwide in the first quarter of 2015.

Valérie Taupin, founder and chairwoman of Teoxane Laboratories, said, "Teoxane is constantly looking for the best solutions to improve patients' comfort and to reduce recovery time, as well as the latest innovations to inject hyaluronic acid in a more precise way. That is why the Teosyal Pen totally met our expectations. Mr Bernard-Pierre Legrand, CEO of Juvaplus, and his team have invented a device (the Teosyal Pen) which significantly reduces injection pain and minimises side-effects."

The product is the first motorised and cordless device specially created to inject hyaluronic acid. The Swiss companies claim the Teosyal Pen will allow practitioners to focus on the more 'artistic aspect' of their work.

The pen works on two programmes, which are used to control pressure, three speeds, and product quantity. Teoxane claim that it will be particularly valuable when aiding delicate oral, peri-oral and peri-orbital areas where it is crucial to use high precision.

"Two of the most important aspects in effective and safe dermal filler injections are accuracy and precision. Teosyal Pen has been designed to offer injectors accurate placement of precise amount of dermal fillers," said Dr Kieren Bong, clinical lecturer and cosmetic doctor in dermatology.

"The majority of my patients found the level of discomfort during injection being much lower than the conventional syringe. This is not surprising as the gentle and more even flow of dermal fillers during injection mean there is less pressure exerted on the tissue, and this translates into a more comfortable experience for patients."
